Your resume may be the first thing hiring managers watch when you apply for a job, but many candidates tend to forget about another important part of the application process: a cover letter. Matthew Rowles, business development manager at recruitment firm Kavaliro, noted that employers don't always read cover letter because of the sheer number of applications received for every job opening. However, some will use it as the next step in candidate screening after reading the resume. People who read cover letters do so after the fact, added Jeff Oddo, president of building maintenance company City Wide Maintenance. They look at your skills first in your resume and then read the cover letter to decide if they want to bring you to an interview. Oddo, who is involved in the hiring process for his company, noted that cover letter is usually ignored when they are generic and pattern style. Rawls agreed, noting that each new application should come with a new, unique cover letter outlining why you are qualified and best suited to this particular position. See related history: 4 simple reasons why you don't get hired Don't just send the same generic cover letter to each position, Rawls told Business News Daily. Recruiters and STAFF managers will recognize these cover letters and let them pass right above them. If you want your cover letter to be read, make it unique to that particular role. In addition to using your cover letter to expand your core skills, you may also want to consider unique topics such as employment gaps in your resume, willingness to move or desire to change careers, said Crystal Wittman, head of global recruitment at talent acquisition and management firm Alexander Mann Solutions. If there is a need to move, use the cover letter as an opportunity to indicate that you are open to relocation, especially if you already have a connection to the area through family or school, Wittman said. This will help alleviate any concerns that the hiring manager is about hiring someone who is new in the area. If you are changing professions or industries, consider examples of your experience that will help you prepare for change and be relevant to your new job. Wittman also reported including information about any internal communications or referrals from current company employees early in the letter. Do this by including the person's name and department. For example, you can write: A former colleague of mine, (name), is a director in your marketing department. She warned me about a new role in your sales organization, for which my skills and experience will be very well suited, said Finally, before submitting a cover letter, be sure to check it for spelling and grammatical errors and the wrong time to convert the document into a PDF format, making it easier for the hiring manager to access and send your email. We like PDF files, Oddo said. Often I'm a mobile mobile I read these apps, and sometimes phones don't open documents the same way a tablet or computer would. Cover letter examples based on these tips, here are two sample cover letter that you can customize to suit your specific needs and situation. Before you apply for any job, be sure to read the job list carefully, as they may ask you to refer to specific things in the cover letter. The traditional cover letter is an example of a traditional cover letter that outlines your skills and qualifications. This type of writing is best suited for highly professional professions that value simple information. Dear name of a hiring manager, I saw your LinkedIn posting about an assistant opening editor at Business News Daily, and I'm thrilled to submit my application for this post. During my career in the media industry, I have gained a lot of editorial experience that would make me a strong asset for your team. During my time at New York University, I held several internships and freelance writing jobs that introduced me to the world of contemporary journalism. After graduating from university, I landed as editor-in-chief in a publishing title that helped me develop and hone leadership, organization and strategic planning skills that would help me succeed as an assistant editor. With the help of interns and freelancers I control, I raised monthly web traffic publishing by more than 50 percent and nearly tripled its total social media following. In addition to the necessary background for this post, I also believe that working for Business News Daily will be an excellent next step in my career. I've been following your articles on social media, and I think your post adds a unique and valuable perspective on entrepreneurship, small business issues and careers. As a millennial myself, I especially like the pieces you published on Generation Y in the workforce. I would love the opportunity to be part of the Daily News business of impressive further growth. If you feel that my qualifications are good, I would be happy to meet with you and discuss what I can do for your company. Please feel free to contact me at any time by email at an email address or phone number to schedule the time. Thank you for your attention and I hope to hear from you soon. Best concerned, Nicole Taylor's narrative cover letter is like a traditional letter, a narrative-style cover letter still touches on your skills and qualifications, but frames it in a more personal, interesting way. This type of cover letter does best for creative positions that seek applicant's identity and style. Dear hiring manager when I was in preschool my teacher asked the class to paint a picture of what we wanted to be when we grew up. While my classmates gave typical little baby answers as a cowboy and firefighter, I proudly proclaimed that I wanted to be an author. While my mine self never realized my dream of being a bestselling writer, I managed to turn my love of writing into a career. Now I work as the editor-in-chief of the publishing where I create most of the content of the site, as well as assign and edit articles to general editorial interns and freelancers of our company. I love this job, but I feel it's time to take the next step in my career and take my talents into publishing where there's room for me to grow. After reading the job description for Business News Daily Assistant Position Editor, I'm sure this will be the perfect next step for me. I've been following BND for a while now and I love the refreshing approach you take to entrepreneurship, leadership and jobs topics. I can say that your employees are really passionate about their work, and sincerely want to help people from all walks of life start a business or promote their careers. I hope to start my own business someday, and would like the opportunity to get a practical education by learning about and sharing the experiences of real successful entrepreneurs. It seems that Business News Daily is moving towards great things, and between my professional editorial experience and my passion for journalism, I believe I could help your team achieve their growth goals. If you want to know more about what I can do for you, please feel free to contact me at any time by emailing email or phone call to phone number. Thank you for your attention and I hope to hear from you soon. Best of all, Nicole Taylor More Patterns You can find more cover letter samples on these sites: About.com Ask the Manager Monster wikiHow Some source interviews were conducted for an earlier version of this article. Some job seekers may assume that hiring managers do not read the hundreds of letters they receive for vacancies. However, a survey of OfficeTeam's 300 executives found that 78 percent still think this document matters in the hiring process. Cover letters will help you impress hiring managers by contrasting each other's communication skills and lettering to applicants. Omitting this document from the hiring process can make the difference between getting an interview or never hearing back after you have originally submitted your resume and application. A well-designed cover letter reads like a compelling story for hiring employers about your work experience and qualifications for opening a job. The letter supports your other application documents, but you should avoid repeating verbatim information and facts. For example, you don't need to mention the exact employment dates in the cover letter because it's already listed in a resume that uses a chronological or combined format. Faculty of Career Services at the Faculty of Law The university stresses to graduates that it is also a misguided myth that job seekers should not mention any information from their resumes. Instead, you should mid where you expand on something extra that is mentioned only briefly about the resume, and this is due to the advertised work. Some recruitment experts will say that job seekers should almost always submit a cover letter with a resume. If the job ad says No cover letter, these instructions exceeded industry expectations. Kim Isaacs is a monster resume expert, and she recommends that you be as concise and concise as possible in a body cover letter, while effectively convincing the hiring manager that you deserve an interview. Read the job description carefully and select the basic qualifications that are expected of applicants. For example, if he asks to get acquainted with Windows operating systems, impress the manager by writing about various versions of the software, including Windows XP through Windows 7, in the cover letter. Computer programs can read your cover letter even if the person manager doesn't do it right away. Recruiters and hiring managers scan hundreds or even thousands of accompanying emails, as well as resumes in a database that can be searched, called the applicant tracking system. These programs can scan work-related keywords in sentences and paragraphs in cover letters. If you lay out your skills and adapt the cover letter to the job description, it can make a difference in getting your application noticed when the hiring manager narrows down the candidates. Dismissals and layoffs are allocated to hiring managers when they consider dates in chronological resumes. However, it is not appropriate to learn anything on the resume about actually being fired and fired. Instead, you can use a cover letter to tell your side of the story. Positively explain the gaps in employment in the final paragraph, perhaps by stating that the industry in which you work is seasonal or that you are back at school to get additional certificates. The hiring manager does not be left to be surprised by the spotted work history, which sometimes means that the person is an unstable employee. This additional information can make a difference in getting a phone call to come for an interview.
